SALL

[A] Information about the SALL project:

'Schools as Living Labs' (SALL) is a European project proposing the living lab methodology as a technique for the development of open schooling activities linked to science learning in Europe's schools. The main idea of the project is that we can help science education relate closer to current needs and challenges if schools collaborate with other stakeholders in co-creative research and innovation rooted in the real-life settings of their local communities. SALL explores and demonstrates this educational use of the living lab methodology in collaborating school communities from 10 countries, by involving teachers, students and local community stakeholders in research and communication activities. The SALL project is being funded for the period between September 2020 and August 2023 by the European Union as a Coordination and Support Action under the 'Science with and for Society' objective of Horizon 2020 Research and Innovation Programme (Grant Agreement No. 871794).

You can find more information about SALL in the project website, which is available at www.schoolsaslivinglabs.eu.

For any further information or clarifications, you can always ask the representative of the SALL project that has been in contact with you, i.e.:
