

Participant Informed Consent Form (Teacher)

The purpose of this document is to inform you about our project, SALL, and ask you for your agreement ('informed consent') to participate in it.

[A] Information about the SALL project

'Schools as Living Labs' (SALL) is a European project proposing the living lab methodology as a technique for the development of open schooling activities linked to science learning in Europe's schools. Our main idea in SALL is that we can help science education relate closer to current needs and challenges if schools collaborate with other stakeholders in co-creative research and innovation activities in the real-life settings of their local communities. In this way, we can help students develop useful skills and positive attitudes, and conceive learning science as a way to contribute actively to the well-being of the world they live in. In SALL, we explore and demonstrate this educational use of the living lab methodology in collaborating school communities from 10 countries, by involving teachers, students and local community stakeholders in research and communication activities. The SALL project is being funded for the period between September 2020 and August 2023 by the European Union under the 'Science with and for Society' objective of Horizon 2020 Research and Innovation Programme (Grant Agreement No. 871794).

How you can help us

Your participation in the activities of the SALL project at selected timepoints between Spring 2021 and Summer 2023 will help us, the team of the SALL project, to achieve the goals of our project. As a teacher at [name of school], you will help us by running of educational activities in which the living lab methodology for open schooling will be used to develop interesting and inspiring school projects with the active involvement of students and teachers, and with support from us. All details of these activities will be decided by teachers themselves in accordance with their teaching goals and the needs and circumstances of their classes, school, and local community, in collaboration with all participants.

Your participation means that you will be asked to provide data and information as part of the evaluation research of the SALL project, by completing questionnaires and/or by participating in interviews and group discussions. The aim of this evaluation research is to assess the impact of the proposed methodology and of the SALL project on the participating schools, teachers, students and societal actors.

At this stage, as a teacher participating in the first pilot of the SALL project, you will be asked to participate in semi-structured interviews or focus group discussions at two points: before and after the implementation of the living lab activities at your school. This will help us collect data for the analysis of Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities, and Threats (SWOT) in relation to the use of the living lab methodology at your school.

In addition, for the above-described evaluation research purposes as well as for purposes of communicating and disseminating the activities and results of the SALL project, we will ask you to share the content of the school projects in the development of which you and your students will participate, with us, with the community of schools participating in the SALL project, and with the public, in the safe online environment of the SALL Community Platform and in the public website of our project.

Confidentiality, privacy and personal data protection will be fully guaranteed throughout this process, whenever data and information are collected from you. You can find the details of this in the statements that we are asking you to confirm further below.

You can find more information about SALL in the project website, which is available at www.schoolsaslivinglabs.eu. There, you can also find a more detailed Participant Information Sheet with information on the ethical principles and practices applied by the SALL project. In addition, for any further information or clarifications, you can always ask the member of the SALL project who is responsible for the organization of the activities in which you will participate and the collection of information and data from you. Your contact for this is:
